Hootsuite Social Platform

Community engagement builds better communities.

53%

of US adults say they get the majority of their news from social media.

From tweeting about policy updates to hosting virtual town hall meetings, social media has transformed how governments engage with their residents.

Residents expect more—and many governments and agencies, from local to national, are feeling the pressure to evolve their social media strategies.

We can turn these challenges into an opportunity.

RMWB saved lives by using Hootsuite for crisis communication

88,000

residents safely evacuated

RMWB needed to be able to monitor what was being said during and after the 2016 Horse River wildfire.

“The Hootsuite platform is extremely comprehensive and has proved invaluable in emergency situations. It's been our one-stop-shop for everything from message management and rumor control to collaboration with other agencies and analytics to improve our programs.”

Allison Pennisi

Deputy Director of Communications, NYC Emergency Management

A diverse group of people is gathered outdoors at what appears to be a community event. In the foreground, a woman with dark skin and braided hair, wearing a dark grey zip-up jacket with a 'Hoy Toledo' logo, holds a green smartphone. To her right, another woman with dark skin, wearing a bright pink short-sleeved shirt and black pants, also holds a smartphone and has her arms crossed. They are both smiling. In the background, other people of various ages and ethnicities are visible, some looking towards the camera and others looking away. The overall atmosphere is positive and engaged.

Community engagement builds better communities.

Thank you.
