WHEREAS, more than 600,000 individuals are released from federal and state prisons with millions more cycle through our jails annually; and

WHEREAS, promoting the rehabilitation and reintegration of individuals who have paid their debt to society makes communities safer by reducing victimization and recidivism, assists those who return from jail or prison to become productive citizens, and saves taxpayer dollars by lowering direct and collateral costs of incarceration; and

WHEREAS, providing returning citizens with affordable housing, job and life skills, educational opportunities, and mental health and addiction treatment services increases the likelihood that they will be successful upon release; and
